

OUR AUTHORS

Staffan Mjönes is a physician, specialist in paediatrics, with international experience from rural Ethiopia and Iraqi Kurdistan. Publications in human growth and nutrition, prevention of childhood injuries and the psychological trauma. Now his scientific focus is on ethnography and archaeology with studies in Mid Sweden University and Umeå University.

staffan.mjones@telia.com

*

Anu Korb is senior researcher at the Estonian Folklore Archives. Her PhD dissertation dealt with Estonian communities in Siberia as a source of folkloristic research. Her scientific interests include oral folklore of Estonians in Russia, especially in Siberia, and folkloristic fieldwork theory.

korb@folklore.ee

*

Sarita Sahay, an Honorary Research Associate at Monash Asia Institute, Monash University, Melbourne, Australia, holds Master's and Doctoral degrees from the Department of Anthropology (then University Grants Commission of India's Centre for Advanced Studies), Ranchi University, Jharkhand, India. She was associated with Indore School of Social Work, Indore (India) for socio-economic and demographic research on families who were displaced due to the setting up of industrial plants in Central India. Subsequently, she worked for several years on the changing socio-cultural configuration of some tribes and scheduled caste people of Central India at the Centre for Applied Cultural Research, Indore. Her research interests vary from Hindu mythology and folklore to tribal studies, women studies, adolescent studies and issues of current interest or concern.

Sarita.Sahay@monash.edu

*

Manolis Sergis is Assistant Professor of Laographia (Folklore) in Demokritus University of Thrace (Northern Greece). He has conducted research in important archive centres in Greece and abroad (Geneva) and fieldwork in various places in Greece. He is presently involved in a longitudinal fieldwork research on the identity of a Pontian village of Thrace. He has published numerous books and articles on the relations between the press and folklore, identities, urban folklore (19th and 20th century), etc.

msergis@otenet.gr

*

Tomi S. Melka works currently at the Department of Humanities, Parkland College, in Champaign, Illinois. He enjoys teaching Spanish grammar as well as the rich culture of the Spanish-speaking countries. His other interests include the study of symbolic and phonetic systems, their underlying principles in coding information and degrees of efficacy in transmitting it. Tomi is inclined for a multi-disciplinary approach and is of the opinion that the mechanisms of ancient information technologies may be applied in modern-day phenomena characterized by complexity, security concerns and uncertainty

tmelka@gmail.com

*

Tarmo Kulmar is Professor of Comparative Religious Studies in the Faculty of Theology, University of Tartu, Estonia. Education: History and Archaeology (1975), Psychology (1991), Dr. Theol. (1994, University of Tartu). Main areas of research are history and religion of pre-Columbian America, the role of religion in ancient totalitarian societies, the treatment of God and spiritual phenomenology in Estonia and early theology.

Tarmo.Kulmar@ut.ee

*

Terry Gunnell is Associate Professor in Folkloristics, Anthropology and Folkloristics, Faculty of Social Sciences, University of Iceland. Fields of research: Old Nordic religion and mythology, Scandinavian folklore, popular drama, comparative folklore.

terry@hi.is

*

L. Madan Mohan is presently working at the Department of Sociology and Political Science, Faculty of Sociology, Dodoma University, Tanzania. His area of academic interests comprises gender studies, tribal studies, cultural studies and population research.

madan.socio@gmail.com