

OUR AUTHORS

Erik Aasland is adjunct professor at the School of Intercultural Studies at Fuller Theological Seminary, US, and adjunct professor at the Global Studies Department at Azusa Pacific University. He serves as member-at-large on the Executive Committee of the Society for Humanistic Anthropology. He has presented and published in anthropology, cognitive science, and folklore. His area of specialisation is the appropriation of Kazakh oral tradition in print, on-line, and in discourse.

erikstan@hotmail.com

Atirkul Agmanova is doctor of philological sciences, professor at the Department of Theoretical and Applied Linguistics, Philological Faculty, L.N. Gumilyov Eurasian National University (Astana, Kazakhstan). Her main research interests are issues of second language acquisition (cognitive, psycho- and socio-linguistic, lingua-didactic aspects); bilingual lexicography, comparative study of the Russian and Kazakh languages, intercultural communication. She is the author of more than 150 works, including six monographs, dedicated to the issues of second language acquisition, contrastive linguistics and intercultural communication.

agmanova@mail.ru

Dinara Amanzholova is a post-graduate student, specialising in the social history of Kazakhstan, at the Abai Kazakhstan National Pedagogical University.

dinaalt@mail.ru

Zhanat Kundakbayeva is professor of history at the al-Farabi Kazakh National University in Almaty. Among her publications are papers discussing the policy of the Russian Empire on the nomadic peoples of the northern Caspian region in the 18th century. Kundakbayeva was fellow of the Slavic Research Centre in Hokkaido, Japan, in 2010, and of the UC Berkeley Institute of Slavic, East European and Eurasian Studies in 2012–2013.

janbekkun@mail.ru

Natalia Mikhailova is head of the Chair of Graphics and Design at the Abai Kazakh National Pedagogical University. She is a highly skilled expert in the field of pedagogical education, culture, and art, an acting expert in the field of the fine arts, and participant in national and international art exhibitions. She has published more than 40 publications in the field of art, culture, and the educational processes at higher schools.

natalia-a.kz@mail.ru

Kamshat Rustem is lecture at the Abai Kazakh National Pedagogical University, Almaty. In 2011–2014 she was a post-graduate student at the al-Farabi Kazakh National University, where in 2014 she received her doctoral degree in history. Her research interests focus on the cultural context and philosophical-ideological assessment of incipient totalitarianism in Kazakhstan, intellectual history of Kazakhstan in the first half of the 20th century, with special interest in the functioning of censorship in print media.

kamshat_rustem@mail.ru

Natalia Struchkova, historian, PhD, is dean of the History Department of the North-East Federal University of Yakutsk, Russian Far East, and professor at the Chair of World History and Anthropology at the same university. She is interested in ritual practices of indigenous people of the Russian Far East, kinetics of Sakha ritual dances, adaptation of traditional Sakha rituals into modern society, and Sakha identity.

struna2006@mail.ru

Madina Sultanova is a lecturer at the Abai Kazakh National Pedagogical University. She has a PhD in art criticism. Her main scientific interests are in the field of the semantics and stylistics of Kazakh traditional and contemporary art. She is the author of more than twenty scientific publications, and two textbooks investigating art traditions of nomads, and modern art of Central Asia.

madina-sultanova@yandex.ru

Zoya Tarasova is associate professor at the Institute of Foreign Languages and Regional Studies of the North-Eastern Federal University in Yakutsk, Russia. Her research interests range from linguistic and cultural aspects of the Sakha national epic olongkho to family and gender issues in the contemporary Sakha (Yakut) community.

zoy-tarasova@yandex.ru

Aimar Ventsel, PhD, works at the Department of Ethnology at the University of Tartu, Estonia, as senior researcher. He has conducted extensive fieldwork in East Siberia, studying property relations, local music business, and identity processes. In recent years he has focused on regional policy, language processes, and identity building in Russian 'ethnic' regions. His second field site is East Germany, where he has explored punk and skinhead subculture.

aimar.ventsel@ut.ee

Galina Vlasova, PhD, professor, dean of the Chair of Philology at the Kazakhstan branch of the Lomonosov Moscow State University. She specialises in Russian literature and folklore studies, with special interest in Russian oral culture and poetics of folklore. She has published several academic works about the Slavic calendar and folklore in Kazakhstan.

g_vlasova@mail.ru

Sholpan Zharkynbekova is professor, dean of the Philological Faculty at L.N. Gumilyov Eurasian National University (Astana, Kazakhstan). She teaches cross-cultural communication, sociolinguistics, cognitive linguistics, cultural linguistics, contrastive linguistics, and other subjects. Her main research interests cover issues of language contacts, ethnolinguistic identity, and verbalisation of ethno-specific concepts in different linguacultures. She is the author of more than 250 scientific works, including 10 monographs, 20 study books and handbooks.

zharkyn.sh.k@gmail.com

Baurzhan Zhanguytin, doctor of historical sciences, professor, deputy head of the Department of History of Kazakhstan at the Abai Kazakh National Pedagogical University. He has published numerous articles and book chapters on population migration in Central Asia during the Soviet and post-Soviet epoch, with special interest in the Stalinist period. His research interests include forced migration, transnational migrations and diaspora in the context of social history and historical demography.

arstan_g@mail.ru